

ELEVENTH SUNDAY IN ORDINARY TIME

FROM: DOCAT

The Common Good, Personhood, Solidarity, Subsidiarity The Principles of the Church's Social Teaching

110. What is the origin of this values?

All values have their origin in God. Love is not an attribute that God has; "God is love" (1 Jn 4:8). Hence love for others must be the central point of reference for all social activity. If I love, I will be truthful, accept the freedom of other people, and work for justice. Love surpasses justice because I not only give the other person what is due to him but wholeheartedly want to do him good. The fundamental value of "the dignity of the human person" also has its basis in God's love for us. Because God loves each individual person beyond all measure, he created him in his lovable likeness; thus man possesses an inalienable inherent dignity.

111. Why is mere justice not enough?

Love is more than justice, for it is "patient" and "kind" (1 Cor 13:4). Mercy must be added to justice in order for society to be truly human. Social justice is not enough for coexistence, much less mere legal justice, since no legislation can generate mutual goodwill among men. Legal justice can only punish offenses against human dignity and help educate to virtue, but social charity releases creative forces for the common good and, thus, for the comprehensive good of all. This includes just structures that allow room for mercy. Nevertheless, justice is something that mercy cannot be: a basic moral requirement. One can only appeal for mercy; justice can be demanded.

Bless those fathers, who have taken upon themselves the responsibility of parenting.

Grant this through Christ our Lord.
Amen.
